

MIDDLE SCHOOL ART:

Bringing Easter to Life

This Easter season, our middle school art students are hard at work on a truly special project—a life-sized display of Jesus' empty tomb! This artistic creation will serve as a powerful visual for our school's Easter chapel, reminding us all of the hope and victory we have in Christ.

In the art room, students have been carefully layering shades of paint onto large sheets of paper spread across the floor. By blending different hues, they are learning how color, texture, and value work together to create the appearance of real stone. Soon, these painted sheets will be wrapped around mesh and shaped over wooden structures, with the help of our talented handyman, Kurtis. The final piece will stand as a testament to both creativity and teamwork.

Bringing Easter to Life

Beyond the artistic techniques they are developing, students are also engaging with the deeper meaning behind their work. Just as they transform blank paper into something new, the resurrection reminds us of God's power to bring new life. As they build the tomb, they are reflecting on the moment when the stone was rolled away, revealing that Jesus had conquered death.

We can't wait for the school to experience the finished display during chapel. Through this project, our students are not just learning about art—they are using their talents to glorify God and share the Easter story in a meaningful way.
