

THEATER ARTS SPOTLIGHT:

Building Rhythm and Teamwork Through Play

In our recent Theater Arts lesson, students explored how rhythm can bring energy, focus, and connection to drama activities. Rhythm games are a fun and effective way to strengthen key performance skills like timing, coordination, and musicality—while also encouraging collaboration and ensemble building.

This week, students participated in an engaging group game set to the upbeat classic “Stayin’ Alive.” Standing or sitting in a circle, students placed their hands on top of one another’s in rhythm with the song. As the beat played, they took turns tapping the next person’s hand in sync with the music, creating a flowing, musical motion around the circle.

Not only did this activity help students develop a stronger sense of rhythm, but it also reinforced focus, listening, and teamwork—all essential elements of theater. It was exciting to see students laughing, concentrating, and working together as they built their rhythm and performance confidence.

This simple yet powerful game reminded us that theater isn’t just about memorizing lines—it’s about connection, timing, and learning to move as one. We can’t wait to continue building on these skills in the weeks to come!
